You can start Photoshop right out of the box. A good starting point is creating a New File. Pick a template that looks good with your content. The New File dialog box allows you to choose a template that comes with Photoshop. After creating a new file, the next steps are to set up a document window, create a new layer and give it a name, and add content to the layer. Set the Size The first step is to make sure the size of the document is correct for the type of image you are creating. For a photograph, usually, your image will be 1024 by 768 pixels. This is the size for printing and it's the size most photofinishing kiosks use. However, for web presentation or photo collages, the size of your document is usually a bit larger, so that you can crop in the future without distorting the image. So, before you begin adding content, make sure the size of your document is correct by accessing the Edit>Document Size option. To set the dimensions of the document to 1024 by 768 pixels (or another size), look at the bottom of the window and click on the Info button. You'll notice that the icon shape changes to match the size selected. Then you can change the size to what you want by clicking on the big plus and minus buttons to the right of the option. When in Layout view, you can also do this by going to the View menu and then selecting From Size and then choosing the size you wish to use. Setting the Resolution Next, make sure your resolution is set to 300 pixels per inch (or 72 dpi), which is what photofinishing kiosks are set to. If your images are pixel-based, you'll need to drop down to 72 dpi. If you are working with vector graphics that will be used on the web, you'll need to set the resolution to 360 pixels per inch, or 72 dpi (120 dpi for vector illustrations and graphics). Of course, you can always go to Image>Resize Canvas to change the size of the image. This is useful if you want to crop the photo by reducing the size of the image. Creating a New Layer Once your size is set, create a new layer by going to the Layers>New>Layer or, if you are in Photoshop's very capable move tool, double-click on a blank area. The new layer

For some, it has been a long time since they have used Photoshop and it is time to relive all those frustrating hours they spent waiting for Photoshop to open and paint a picture when they weren't sure if it was working. This is an incomplete list of ways of making Photoshop slow to open. If you know of any that have been updated, then please notify me. Update (10-12-2019): Google has added the slow open to the help section of the Chrome webstore. It can be accessed by clicking the "Help" icon in the top right corner of the Chrome window and then clicking "Open webstore." There is also a video on YouTube. Enable and disable features This approach gets rid of most or all of the features of Photoshop, including the paint bucket tool and most of the workflows, but keeps the bundled software. If you just want to disable features, you can go to Preferences > Performance and uncheck things that slow Photoshop down. If you really just want to get rid of Photoshop and replace it with something else, you can install a program called psReplace, which removes Photoshop from the Windows start menu. This program does not remove the software but it goes in and changes it so that when you start it, it starts up a browser window that takes you to a page explaining how to add Photoshop Elements to the Windows start menu. To use it, download it here and run it. Most of the heavy work is done by the run button. There is one button that says "Copy Photoshop" that will copy a profile from your profile folder, one called "Past Photoshop" that will "Re-install" PS, and one called "Remove Photoshop" that will uninstall the program. If you want to remove Photoshop Elements from your computer, just open the program and press the appropriate button until you're finished. To change the settings without going through the start menu, you can use the command-line version. Run the following command in the command prompt: C:\Users\Your UserName\AppData\Roaming\Adobe\PS\10.0\Adobe Photoshop Elements\PSHelper.exe Scroll down to the user.config.local.pshe elements.exe and user.config.local.pshe xml files and make any changes you want in there. This is a fairly tedious process. Make sure you don't make any 05a79cecff

1. From the Application menu, select Brushes. 2. Click the New Brush Button. 3. Choose Radial-Pattern. 4. Make sure your foreground color is white (Hexadecimal: #FFFFFF or RGB: 255, 255, 255) 5. Click the little box in the top right of the screen to select a white pixel area to copy (as shown in Figure 3.23). 6. Click the New Brush button to place a white brush in that selection. 7. Use the Brush Brush tool to paint white into the black hole, surrounding the green crop circle. 8. You should now have a white area in the black hole. 9. Reduce the opacity of the brush to 75%, so that the white color is only partially visible. 10. Reduce the opacity of the brush to 50% (see Figure 3.24). 11. With the brush active, choose the Magic Wand tool. 12. Select the area of the image that is not the crop circle. 13. Press and hold the SHIFT key. 14. Click Crop Cicle. This will select all of the edges in the crop circle (see Figure 3.25). 15. Set the Crop Circles tool to Fill. 16. As the crop circle is filled, the rest of the image will be automatically cropped away. FIGURE 3.23 FIGURE 3.24 FIGURE 3.25 # 2. TIMES CROPPING When you are using the Free Transform tool, you can crop the image to any shape, even if it is an irregular shape. You can do this by using the Crop tool. To crop an image, select the Crop tool . You can also use the Crop tool to crop a specific area of an image. Just select a rectangle and click the Crop button in the Options bar, or click the rectangle with the mouse. This command crops all of the pixels in that area to a new size. You can also set the Crop tool to a particular area of the image by using the Rectangular or Russia's Defense Ministry has rejected speculation that the country has launched an attack in the Mediterranean Sea. "This is a story based on disinformation," a spokesperson for the ministry told reporters at a briefing in Moscow on Monday. "As always, we reject these claims and suggest that the information is spread by foreign agencies trying to invent something." NATO has reportedly claimed that Russian jets flew over the Mediterranean Sea, carrying out patrols near a Syrian port and carrying out a bombing run near Malta. A Russian military official told Russia's state-run TASS news agency that the jets conducted "training flights." "Neither Syria, nor the Russian Navy, nor the Syrian Air Force, nor the Russian Defense Ministry have such orders," the representative added. The spokesperson for the Defense Ministry also said that Russia's military jets were not involved in a firefight with Turkish warplanes in Syria on Monday. Turkey shot down a Russian warplane on November 24 after it entered Turkish airspace over Syria — the first time a NATO member shot down a Russian jet since the Cold War. Reports of Russian jets in the Mediterranean have appeared in media reports and online media outlets, including the US-based Marine Corps Times. "Russian military aircraft have been spotted patrolling the Mediterranean Sea — frequently without notification," they wrote. "The Russian Navy has been spotted patrolling off the coast of Syria and has also been involved in a number of skirmishes with NATO reconnaissance warplanes over Syria." NATO, however, has denied the accusations. "There is no imminent or immediate threat to NATO, NATO's collective defense is not under threat, NATO is not at war, NATO's activities are fully in line with the provisions of the Charter," the Supreme Allied Commander Europe, Gen. Curtis Scaparrotti, said at a press conference last week. "The Russian Federation is a permanent member of the UN Security Council, it is not a member of NATO." "The NATO military posture is defensive in nature. We do not seek to confront anyone or to go to war. We are not at war with anyone," he added. Russia's foreign ministry has accused Turkey of violating the rules of the Syria's newly declared "de-escalation zone" in the country by shooting down a Russian jet.
