Kanban has been around since the 1950's and became popular during the first dotcom bubble. By the end of the dotcom bubble, many companies had made the switch from waterfall project management to agile project management. I am in my mid 30's (I realize that I get to use this term over and over again), and I am just trying to make the most user-friendly, intuitive and usable Kanban-like tool available. It's not very polished but I'd love some feedback from the community. MRI-guided intratumoral injection of lipiodol-iodized microcapsules.
