Salix interior Salix interior is an Endemic species of willow known for its characteristic and robust trunk and large leaves. Distribution S. interior is distributed over the "greater part of the eastern half of North America east of the Mississippi River and the United States-Canadian border." The wide variety of habitats the species is found in include wetlands, plains, prairies, barrens, swamps, dunes, deserts, mountain slopes, and mixed deciduous forests. It is also a common nuisance in road banks. S. interior is "distinguished by its very large leaves, which are often as large as 50 cm in diameter, and its dark, deeply incised petioles." Although the major difference between S. interior and S. nigra is the pinnation, "the latter does not have the coarse, somewhat glossy hairs along the midrib, as the interior does. It is also much more closely related to Salix pulchra of southern Russia.” Habitat and Ecology S. interior grows in a wide variety of environments, but like many North American willows it is most common in the Great Plains and Prairie Lowlands in the northern regions of the continent. Some examples of the habitats include the states of: Florida, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Mississippi, Missouri, Texas, Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Connecticut, Missouri, Indiana, Kansas, Arkansas, Colorado, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Louisiana, and Missouri. S. interior is found in areas that can have high to very high yearly rainfall. However, “in some areas (e.g., eastern Texas and southeastern Oklahoma), this species has been established on swamps with irregular rainfall.” This species has been found to have a tolerance for “salt and drought-stressed environments.” Conservation The conservation of S. interior is mainly through land preservation and conservation easements. The annual rate of population loss is 0.03% however, some endangered c6a93da74d
